

AND Malcolm Andrews, 1944-2018

From The Port Macquarie News 26 Oct 2018:

Malcolm was born on 4 May 1944 in Summer Hill to parents Evelyn and Kenneth Andrews. The family moved to Cooma in 1952 where Malcolm and his brother grew up as 'Snowy kids' with his father Ken landing a job on the Snowy Mountains Scheme.

It was a night spent behind bars at Central Police Station that saw the birth of his journalistic career when he fired off a letter to the Telegraph about the appalling condition of the holding cell. The same letter was published in the Sydney University newsletter by then editor Laurie Oakes. Malcolm started on the police rounds at the Sydney Daily Telegraph in 1965 and the rest as they say is history. He worked at the Central Court of Petty Sessions, the Telegraph and Radio 2UW before heading to England at 23 for a stint in North Hampshire on the Evening Telegraph.

His big break was a start on the Daily Express on London's Fleet Street in 1968. English pubs played an integral part in finding the stories of the day and became an alternative office and a home away from home for Malcolm.

On the Telegraph in Sydney, Malcolm covered all manner of stories – it was a roll call of who's who, wannabes, wish they hadn't been and those thrust into the limelight. Crims and cons, politicians and artists, people from all walks of life. He was trackside, ringside, in stands or out on the road with a photographer. He was in the homes of billionaires and with the ordinary men and women who achieved the extraordinary. Wherever there was a story to be had, Malcolm was there treating everyone with the same politeness and respect. In a career that spanned the last 53 years, Malcolm was known as a "journos journo". He had a regular spot talking all things travel on Strawny's radio show and a weekly column in the Port Macquarie News.

He penned more than 30 books with the last – Geez That's a Bloody Good Story – remaining unfinished.

He passed away on 10 October 2018.

At the time of his death he was also working on a book about "the characters who shaped Port Macquarie and the Hastings", provisionally titled "Vintage Port".
